Orpheum.

Orpheum.

Will M. Cressy, who, with Miss Blanche Dayne, is appearing in a little sketch at the Orpheum this week, has Just returned from overseas where he shad Miss Dayne were two of the first to go over as entertainers for the American army. He has brought back a book full of new stories that he gathered while in France. The following is a sample of the number of good ones that he is telling this week. The American army was democratic. The captain of a company might be an ex-street car conductor and there would be clerke, bankers, had carriers, lawyers, blacksmiths, ministers, millionaires and schoolhoys in his company. And all friends and acquaintances from boyhood. The English army consists of two classes—officers and privates. And the line between the two is drawn very sharply. They could not understand that spirit of friendship or lack of reserve in the United States army. One day early in the days of the American invasion, the captain of a company from one of the smaller Mid-Western cities lined his men up. "Now boys," he said, "tomorrow we are to be reviewed by the English officers, and I want to have you make good. See that your guns are in good condition, your coats buttoned, your shoes shined, and shine the heels as well as the toes. And for God's sake, don't call be Bill."

Two negro boys were longing for the warm sun of their Southern homes. They had been talking about it for an hour. Finally a third boy could stand it no longe. "How come," he said, "all de way over on the ship you all was so skield yo' wanted to die? An didn't you all say ye would never cross dat overa again." "Sho' I did, an Ah isin't gwine cross no occan to git there?" "Ah'm gwine by the way of New Orleans."

Moving Pictures

Majestic.

Majestic.

Wouldn't you think you were "in pretry soft" if you were taken under the wing of your millionaire employer as his protege? That's what happens to Charlie Ray in his new ince picture. Red Hot Dollars," the attraction at the Majestic theater, beginning Thursday.
But it had its drawbacks. In the first clace, Charlie's guardian was the worst enemy or the old grandfather with whom the youth's sweetheart lived. And when the grandfather heard of Charlie's good fortune, he rewarded him by kicking him out of the house.

Hut Charlie's pluck and wit bring things out all right in the end. "Red Hot Dollars" is said to be one of the best of mimitable Ray pictures.

Strand.

In "A Girl Named Mary," the picture in which Marguerite Clark is to be starred at the Strand theater, starting Thursday, the traditionally impossible task of locating the needle in the hay-stack is stacessfully accomplished. Not attend the startest in th Murguerite Clark is the daughter—i charming little stenographer—and Kath-lyn Williams is the rich widow who seeks her.

Princess.

Princess.

Beesie Barriscale will be the star presented at the Princess for two days, commencing today. Her latest offering is "Reckoning Roads." The story is of a pretty girl who marries while young, then leaves her husband because he is under parental influences. Later she is employed by the man who find swindled her father out of his fortune, and the manner in which she wreaks her revenge and is reunited with her husband, makes a story of compelling interest. Two comedies are added.
